The topic of the AANLS Neo-Latin panel at the 145th Annual Meeting of the APA in Chicago, was “The World of Neo-Latin: Current Research.” The panel took place on January 5, the last day of the conference. Bad weather, flight cancellations, and low attendance loomed over the conference. Despite these setbacks, the panel was an excellent one, and all the papers were well received and generated good discussion. Annet den Haan (Rijksuniversiteit Groningen) presented on the Biblical scholarship of Giannozzo Manetti, Eric Hutchinson (Hillsdale College) presented on paraphrases of Psalm 1 in Hesus, Buchanan, and Beza, Robert Clinton Simms (Chuo University) presented on the Classical tradition and Thomas May’s Supplementum Lucani, Albert R. Baca (California State University, Northridge) presented on the de Arte Poetica of Theophanes Prokopovich, and Patrick Owens (Wyoming Catholic College) presented on Arcadius Avellanus, a twentieth century Neo-Latinist.

News from Members

Edward V. George. Brill's Encyclopedia of the Neo-Latin World, a rich reference work for the entire field in two volumes and over 1200 double-column pages, with Index, appeared in print this spring. It will be a uniquely valuable resource for any Neo-Latinist. See description at <http://www.brill.com/products/book/brills-encyclopaedia-neo-latin-world>. The work will also be available online in June 2014.

The online journal eHumanista, vol. 26, has published a series of articles on the expatriate Spanish humanist Juan Luis Vives (1492-1540), Monographic Issue. Juan Luis Vives. New Approaches, accessible at http://www.ehumanista.ucsb.edu/volumes/volume_26/index.shtml. Among these articles is Edward V. George, "Captive Greeks and Deluded Europeans: Notes on Juan Luis Vives's De conditione vitae Christianorum sub Turca (1529)", 508-529. (http://www.ehumanista.ucsb.edu/volumes/volume_26/ehumanista%2026/PDFs/3%20coronel/ehum26.8.george.pdf).

Karl Kohut has an article on Vives in eHumanista, vol. 26, Monographic Issue. Juan Luis Vives. New Approaches, (http://www.ehumanista.ucsb.edu/volumes/volume_26/ehumanista%2026/PDFs/3%20coronel/ehum26.8.george.pdf); "Vives, la guerra y la paz." 539-568.

Joseph (Jay) D. Reed gave a talk in the Harvard Classics department in April on Garcilaso de la Vega's third Latin ode ("Sedes ad Cyprias Venus...").

Carl P. E. Springer's article "Bach's Latin," recently appeared in Ad Fontes Witebergenses: Select Proceedings of "Lutheranism and the Classics II: Reading the Church Fathers, Concordia Theological Seminary, September 28-29, 2012, a volume which he co-edited with James Kellerman (Bridgeport, Texas: Lutheran Legacy Press), pp. 293-307.

Rose Williams has finished one-third of her latest book "Latin of New Spain," which is an intermediate text using the Latin writings of Landivar, Acosta, Cervantes de Salazar, and Cabrera, who is a living author of the Latin epic "Monumenta Mexicana."

Charles Fantazzi is co-editor of the new Brill's Encyclopaedia of the Neo-Latin World (2014). Several members of the AANLS have published articles in the encyclopedia:

The Second Annual Neo-Latin Symposium at the Kentucky Foreign Language Conference Lexington, Kentucky, April 2014

by Jennifer Morrish Tunberg

The second annual Neo-Latin Symposium, held under the auspices of the Kentucky Foreign Language Conference (KFLC), took place on the campus of the University of Kentucky in Lexington, Kentucky, on April 10-12, 2014. Seventeen learned papers were presented by scholars from Australia, Brazil, Canada, Italy and the United States. The papers covered a wide range of subjects and demonstrated the fascinating diversity that defines Neo-Latin literature. In addition to the scholarly papers, there were also two demonstrations of typical classes in The Institute for Latin Studies at the University of Kentucky. The Institute offers a curriculum at the MA level in which the language of instruction, classroom interaction, reading and writing is Latin.

The Neo-Latin Symposium at KFLC was inaugurated to raise awareness in North America of Neo-Latin and to offer Neo-Latinists everywhere a forum in which to present current research. We welcome scholars at all levels from advanced graduate students to established professors to emeriti. It is our hope that each person who participates in the Symposium will also attend the Neo-Latin papers given by others and contribute to the discussions that follow each group of papers. This year, many of the participants remarked on how much they had learned from the papers, presentations and discussions. Participants were also able to interact with one another during coffee breaks and lunch. The Dinner for Presenters (held this year at a Lexington restaurant that features locally sourced food) also provided a relaxed and enjoyable forum in which participants could converse and become better acquainted.

The third annual Neo-Latin Symposium at KFLC will be held in Lexington, Kentucky, on 23-25 April 2015. It will be able to accommodate 20-25 papers. The Call for Papers will be published in June on the KFLC web site (google: KFLC). Papers need to be 20 minutes long and delivered in English. If you have questions about the Neo-Latin Symposium at KFLC, please contact me, Jennifer Tunberg, at jtunberg@yahoo.com.

Humanism and Classical Crisis: Anxiety, Intertexts, and the Miltonic Memory (2014)
by Jacob Blevins

Blevins asserts that influence and imitation are primarily driven by anxious desires to identify the poetic self with the past while simultaneously affirming the autonomy and individuality of the self within its own cultural, ideological, and poetic moment.
